A large grid of dotted lines, intended for writing notes or a journal. The grid is divided into three main columns by vertical lines, corresponding to the days of the week: Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. The first column on the left is for general notes, while the other two are for daily entries. The grid extends from the top header to the bottom of the page and spans the width of the three columns.

This image shows a planning sheet with a grid. The top row is divided into four columns representing the days 10/13 (Thursday), 10/14 (Friday), 10/15 (Saturday), and 10/16 (Sunday). Each of these columns has a vertical header bar with the date and day of the week. Below the header bars, the entire page is filled with a grid of small squares, separated by dashed lines. The grid is organized into three main horizontal sections: the top section contains 20 rows within the four day columns; the middle section is a single wide area spanning all four columns with 15 rows; and the bottom section is another single wide area spanning all four columns with 15 rows.
